

Write2Them service helps improve morale of military recruits at basic training and boot camp

June 13, 2012

Family and friends send emails and recruits receive letters in the mail

COLORADO SPRINGS, CO – June 13, 2012 – Families and friends of new military recruits heading off to boot camp or basic training have a new service to help them keep in touch. When traditional letters are the only available form of communication, Write2Them makes getting letters and photos from home easier. With Write2Them service, family and friends send emails and recruits receive letters in the mail.

When a parent or loved one signs up for a Write2Them account, a unique write2them.com email address is created for the recruit. Family and friends are then specified by the account owner and given permission to send emails to that exclusive email address for the duration of the subscription. On a daily basis, the received emails (including photos or scans of newspaper articles) are compiled, printed, and mailed to the appropriate basic training or boot camp mailing address. The recruit receives a compilation of letters and photos from family and friends, helping improve their morale. Write2Them provides service to all military basic training locations and the military service academies.

“I started Write2Them because I wanted an easy way to communicate with my son while he was at Air Force Basic Training at Lackland AFB, Texas. I knew sending an email rather than writing and mailing a letter would be easier for our family and that it would encourage his friends to stay in touch with him, too”, said Helen Simmons, President and Founder of Write2Them.

The Write2Them website also provides tools and information for parents of military recruits and recruiters. A free downloadable Address Worksheet can be printed and placed by the phone for parents who are anxiously awaiting that first call from their son or daughter to provide their mailing address.

Committed to supporting military families, Write2Them donates a portion of each paid subscription to a related military charitable organization.
